Teaching Clinical Audit: Accredited Course

The course was set up by Clinical Audit Support Centre (CASC) in 2010 and have proved hugely popular. The course focuses on how to use the Clinical Audit Teaching Toolkit - a resource that was created by CASC and commissioned by the Healthcare Quality Improvement Partnership. The pandemic has restricted the opportunity to run this face-to-face training, but we now return with new materials plus advice on delivering virtual training.

01

What is the aim of your audit training?

What do you want to achieve by offering training in clinical audit and QI? How do you know training is needed and what the current levels of knowledge are? Learn how to conduct a Learning Needs Analysis and create relevant bespoke training courses.

Understanding learning styles

All human beings are unique and trainers have to understand that learners don't all like the same approach. We will explore the most common learning styles (including your own) and explain how to meet the needs of all learners.

Constructing lesson plans

Lessons plans are the foundation stones of good teaching. They set out clear learning outcomes for those attendees and provide trainers with key information to assist them in delivery. Lesson plans also standardise training and ensure consistency.

Teaching clinical audit methodology

Our teaching toolkit includes lots of useful resources and aides that will help you explain key elements of the clinical audit process. We have films, games, handouts, case studies, etc. All have been rigorously tested to make sure they meet learner needs.

Training in the post COVID world

The pandemic has changed the way that people learn forever. Many learners now want access to virtual training sessions rather than classroom based sessions. We will provide lots of hints and tips to best illustrate how training can be delivered effectively online.

In addition...

Stephen and Tracy will provide tips on presenting and focus on dealing with difficult situations. Learners will receive a copy of the new CASC Clinical Audit Teaching Toolkit - refreshed for 2023! The day is thought-provoking, highly interactive, but also a great deal of fun!
